Hey there - A couple of quick notes before we head into the July 4^{th} weekend:

Is school cool? Summer hits its stride with the holiday, but schools around the country are starting to plan their return to full-time, in-person learning. How do the kids in your world feel about that? Have them share their thoughts on the #DearGrownUps page we created with Highlights for Children, and we'll share them with lawmakers.

July 15. Mark it: That's the day nearly 90% of all families with children will start receiving a "new and improved" Child Tax Credit that delivers up to $300 per child and distributes it monthly. The only thing that could make this historic increase and monthly distribution better? Making it permanent. Without that, the payments end in December. Check out the more than 250 organizations that have joined First Focus in urging the White House to make permanent the CTC expansion and other improvements to measures that fight child poverty.

Kids need drug money: The country's first opioids case to be decided by a jury — rather than a judge — began this week in New York. One thing that's unlikely to change? The way kids are sidelined. An estimated 2.2 million children have been affected by the nation's opioid crisis, yet they are consistently ignored. First Focus on Children convened a group of experts to develop 12 recommendations for prioritizing — or, at the very least, including — children in these settlements. Find out where kids in your state stand.

Have a safe, happy, holiday weekend!
